Telephone survey records feedback

The 509th Medical Group was selected to participate in a telephone survey to get timely feedback from patients about their outpatient visit.

An authorized person will contact patients who visited the MedGp and ask questions about the appointment. The caller will ask six to eight questions and contact patients between 5 and 8 p.m. weekdays, except holidays, beginning Tuesday.

The feedback will help the 509th MedGp leaders assess the level of service provided. For more details, call Master Sgt. Steve Chabotte at 687-2123.

Whiteman was rollin' Sept. 23-24.

Cols. Matt Erichsen, 509th Bomb Wing vice commander and Connie Davis, 509th Mission Support Group commander, conducted the annual vehicle roll-by inspection.

This year more than 360 of Whiteman's vehicles were inspected. The 63.35 percent easily outdistanced the 48 percent rate in 2003.

Planning for the inspection took approximately two months and is a team effort; ranging from vehicle management, to the vehicle control officer, to the Airmen responsible for the general maintenance of vehicles.

"You could tell the troops were proud of their vehicles," Colonel Erichsen said. "From the newest pickup to the classic vintage, we had some great looking (vehicles)."

While the entire vehicle is subject to inspection, the colonels primarily focused on the vehicles' appearance inside and outside appearance.

"The roll-by let us actively confirm that we continue to exceed the standard in the quality of our vehicle maintenance," the vice commander said.

The event was broken into two six-hour sessions during the two days. On the first day, vehicles primarily used on the flight line were pre-positioned in front of Bldg. 33 and inspected there by the colonels.

The second day of the inspection began in the 509th Civil Engineer Squadron heavy equipment yard where snow removal vehicles were examined. Finally, the colonels were taken to the north ramp where other vehicles paraded by during a three-hour period.

The vehicle roll-by is primarily used to establish the refurbishment plan for the next fiscal year, so maximum participation is necessary, said Tech. Sgt. Chris Morris 509th Logistics Readiness Squadron. He said it's unrealistic to anticipate that every vehicle on base be available during these two days, so 60 percent is the set goal for success. In 2002, a record 77 percent of vehicles were inspected.

"The VCO's seem to be taking good care of their vehicle assets," Colonel Davis said.

Guidance for conducting the roll-by primarily comes from Air Combat Command Instruction 24-350 which states all wing vehicles will be inspected by the wing commander.

509ERS LEADING — The 509th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron is this year's Air Combat Command Maintenance Effectiveness Award winner in the large squadron category. This reflects outstanding performance by 509th Airmen. It reflects their hard work. It also means we're able to put B-2 airpower into the air where it belongs, when and where our nation needs it for training or combat. I'm proud of them and hope you are too!

MILITARY APPRECIATION — Our neighbors appreciate what we do and to show it, Central Missouri State University will give free admission to military members, retirees and family members (with ID cards) Saturday's game in Warrensburg, between the CMSU Mules and the Missouri Western State College Griffons. I encourage you to go and spend some time with the citizens who support our base and Air Force. Also, mark your calendars for

Nov. 6 — the University of Missouri will host a military appreciation event as they play Kansas State; discounted tickets are available from first sergeants and there will be a free tailgate party.

CFC — The CFC campaign is under way; some units have already met their 100 percent contact goal. I appreciate the community spirit you've already shown with your donations. If you haven't made a decision or been contacted yet, I encourage you to get the information you need and make your choice.

WINTER SAFETY — It's not winter yet, but it's just around the corner. This is a good time to make sure your car is ready for cooler weather with a good heater, good tires and appropriate safety equipment. It's also a time for you and everyone in your family who drives to get mentally ready to deal with frosty windows, icy and snowy roads, and winter delays. Staying safe in the winter isn't harder it's just different. Please take it seriously!

509th Security Forces Squadron Law Enforcement Superintendent

With summer ending, fall beginning and winter around the corner, we should think about adjusting our driving techniques to meet the changing road and weather conditions. This information might help you deal with the challenges of driving on wet, icy or snow-covered roads.

Wet roads — Be sure to slow your speed and leave a safe distance between your vehicle and the vehicle in front of you.

When it starts to rain, water mixes with the dust and oil on the road to form a slick, greasy film. Fallen leaves on the road can also reduce tire traction. The wet pavement may make it harder for you to stay on the road on curves. It will also take longer to stop your vehicle.

On wet pavement, your tires may ride on the water rather than the pavement. This is known as "hydroplaning," meaning loss of traction and control. Hydroplaning can happen at speeds over 35 mph. In a severe rainstorm, the tires can lose all contact with the road at 55 mph.

If you think your tires are hydroplaning, take your foot off the accelerator and slow down. Don't hit the brakes — this may cause you to skid. To avoid hydroplaning:

- ✓ Have good tires with deep treads on your vehicle.
- ✓ Keep tires properly inflated.
- ✓ Slow down during rainstorms or when the pavement is wet.
- ✓ It is very dangerous to drive in fog. If you must drive in fog, you should:
 - ✓ Reduce your speed.
 - ✓ Be alert and ready to stop.
 - ✓ Keep your headlights on low beam.

In fog, you will see less if your lights are on high beam.

If the fog becomes so thick you can't see, pull completely off the road and stop. Leave your lights and emergency flashers ON.

Tires — Your vehicle should have tires that are rated for driving in snow. If they are not, you should have chains ready to put on your tires during bad weather. Even if you have snow tires or chains, you cannot drive safely on snow or ice at normal speeds. If there is snow or ice on the road - slow down.

Winter driving — Before leaving home, clean all snow and ice off your windows, headlights and taillights. Be sure your windshield wipers and defroster are working. No matter how far you are going to drive, never start driving until all snow and ice are removed and windows are

Uniform prices dropping

By Capt. Diane Weed

Army & Air Force Exchange Public Affairs

Prices for most issue uniform items sold at Army & Air Force Exchange Service military clothing sales stores will decrease on today.

The annual price changes at the Defense Supply Center in Philadelphia will go into effect and the overall prices for issue items will drop by a little more than one percent.

"This year, the temperate battle dress uniform coats and the Air Force men's and women's lightweight jackets are the only items with any significant price increase — and that increase is less than $4 per item," said Hazel Green, DSCP planner at headquarters AAFES.

AAFES never makes a profit on DSCP items since they're always sold at cost. Price decreases, or conversely increases, are determined by the DSCP and passed along to the customers via AAFES stores.

The DSCP is the sole military supply source for issue merchandise. DSCP items sold by AAFES made up 57 percent of the total MCSS' sales in fiscal 2003.

In addition to DSCP items, AAFES offers higher-quality optional items in order to give customers more choices.

On the other end of the spectrum, AAFES offers Exchange Select insignia products that sell for 30 to 60 percent less than name-brand equivalents.

"If you can't find what you are looking for, let your MCSS manager know so they can get the item you need. Our MCSS managers have a great network and cross-level merchandise everyday to take care of their customers' needs," said David Lumbley, Divisional Merchandise Manager for MCSS.

The MCSS concept was established by a Congressional charter for the Air Force in the mid 70s and for the Army in 1981.

Some Airmen can carry over 'use or lose'

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas (AFPN) —Active-duty Airmen who were unable to take leave because they supported contingency operations may be allowed to accumulate more than the normal 60 days after the fiscal year ends.

Those affected can retain up to 120 days of leave until Sept. 30, 2005, said Air Force Personnel Center officials here.

"This program is meant to enable people to take leave they've earned," said Senior Master Sgt. Don Taylor, the center's customer support operations superintendent.

The carry-over leave must be taken in 2005 so Airmen do not lose leave next year, he said.

For more information, call the military personnel flight at 687-6426.

Pay 'enhancements'

Airman 1st Class Candace Shannon and Airman Courtney Light, 509th Comptroller Squadron, scroll through the MyPay Web site. The online pay account information system of the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, myPay, offers new enhancements and upgrades for all users. All myPay users can assign a restricted access personal identification number to a designated individual to view pay information; however, the designee can't make any changes to the allotments or account information. Users also can add a personal e-mail address to be notified of pay changes and other items of interest. Also, active-duty Airmen can view 12 months of leave and earning statements, and start, stop and change financial allotments and savings bonds. Currently, myPay has nearly 3 million users with customized PINs and serves all service members, military retirees and annuitants, Department of Defense civilian employees and Department of Energy employees.

NORI tips: Use proper cover

What can I do to help the wing prepare for the Oct. 20-29 Nuclear Operational Readiness Inspection?

First, display a professional and positive attitude in your unit when you perform your procedures and taskings.

Second, ensure your unit is prepared to accomplish the mission as required by reviewing wing and unit plans.

Finally, read previous inspector general and local exercise reports found on the XP intranet Web page at <https://intranet.whiteman.af.mil/509BW/BW/XP/homepage.html>, to minimize any repeat problem areas. Additionally, check your squadron for compliance with a new Special Interest

Item 04-4, Air Force Chief of Staff Fitness Program.

Remember, you are a critical link and a part of the world's finest Air Force. Show the inspectors how to make the mission a complete success — the Whiteman way.

This week's tip: People who participate in exercises or contingencies must wear the battle dress uniform cap, not baseball caps, colored or subdued caps.

‘Closing’ time

First Lt. Mark Koeppen and Sabrina Parsons, 509th Bomb Wing financial analysis office, discuss the wing’s annual fiscal year close-out. The end of the fiscal year means the financial analysis office must zero-out all financial accounts for the base. This annual close-out process requires all funding issued in fiscal 2004 to be spent or returned to Air Combat Command. As of Sept. 1, all available funds were consolidated by the 509th Comptroller Squadron in order to purchase mission essential requirements, which were identified by the wing resource advisors. These requirements were prioritized and approved by the Financial Management Board, chaired by Col. Chris Miller, 509th Bomb Wing commander. This procedure provides squadrons obtain items such as computers or other high dollar upgrades they wouldn’t be able to purchase within their group or squadron budget.

The Five Points of Life is a non-profit organization, created in 1997 by Life South, dedicated to raising awareness about the five ways people can share life with others through donation. The Five Points represent the whole blood, aspheresis, bone marrow, umbilical cord blood and organ/tissue donations. The Five Points of Life ride takes place every other year and 18-person team spends seven weeks traveling across the country. The team was on its way to Sedalia and stopped at Whiteman to speak to base members about the importance of blood and organ donation.

Whiteman Spirit Award

Tech. Sgt. Annette Keyes
509th Bomb Wing

Tech. Sgt. Annette Keyes, 509th Bomb Wing, received the Whiteman Spirit Award from Col. Chris Miller, 509th BW commander, Monday.

Lt. Col. Cheryl Thompson, 509th BW Staff Judge Advocate, nominated Sergeant Keyes for this award for filling a void after the law office manager moved.

Since July, Sergeant Keyes has managed the 20-person legal office. During this time, she taught herself budget, civilian personnel systems, equipment management, how to do officer and enlisted performance reviews, decoration management and execution, office suspense program, and temporary duty order preparation. She also supervised 10 paralegals, one civilian and one enlisted information management specialist.

“She did this while maintaining total control of the full-time workload — she manages and works as the NCOIC of Civil Law,” Colonel Thompson said. “With the increase in court martial workload, Sergeant Keyes took over as the NCOIC responsible for training the paralegals during the weekly training sessions. These weekly two-hour training sessions are critical for the upgrade of our new 3-level paralegals and for the continuing education of our more experienced paralegals.”

Sergeant Keyes kept the office running smoothly even though there was no one to work at the front desk regularly.

“She was directly responsible for hiring the new front desk secretary, cutting through all the red tape with the new civilian personnel system,” the JAG said. “Sergeant Keyes conducted six interviews of the most worthy candidates and made the selection. As the result of her hard work, the new secretary starts next week!”

Master Sgt. Marcus Gray, 509th Mission Support Squadron talks with Master Sgt. Darlene Buss, 509th Bomb Wing and 509th MSS first sergeant, about coping with anger. Professionalism and self-control should be maintained when dealing with anger, Sergeant Buss said.

1st Sergeant's View

By Master Sgt. Darlene Buss

509th Mission Support Squadron and 509th Bomb Wing First Sergeant

A few weeks ago as I left the commissary, an older man motioned for me to come over to his truck.

Thinking I could be of some assistance, I went over to his vehicle.

"What is this Air Force coming to?" the man said as I approached him.

I worried that someone from the Whiteman Family had done something to upset this man. So I asked the man, whom I discovered was a retired technical sergeant, what the problem was.

"Well, female first sergeants?" he said. "If I had a female first shirt I would have just quit!"

I thought he was joking and I chuckled and waited for the punch line. There was none.

I stood there and listened to him as he angrily continued on and on how he could not believe what was going on in the Air Force!

People get angry for many reasons, it may have nothing to do with the reason they single you out.

Do I believe that this man thought because I was a female, I couldn't do my job? No, I think there were many underlying circumstances that this man had no control over, and when he saw me, his anger boiled over.

Anger will eat away at every corner of your life if you let it! Many significant, life-changing bad choices and possible permanent decisions are made when anger rules your judgment. When you speak in anger you lose the respect of the person you are talking to!

I believe this man and I could have sat down together and had a wonderful conversation about today's Air Force, its history, and how deeply we care about our service. I believe this man could have told me many things about the days he served and about some of the proud moments he had in his military career.

However, because of his anger, we couldn't even share a conversation and learn that we both are proud to be a part of the greatest nation and Air Force the world will ever see!

There is a time and a place for everything however professionalism must always come first!

If the fog becomes so thick you can’t see, pull completely off the road and stop. Leave your lights and emergency flashers ON.

Tires — Your vehicle should have tires that are rated for driving in snow. If they are not, you should have chains ready to put on your tires during bad weather. Even if you have snow tires or chains, you cannot drive safely on snow or ice at normal speeds. If there is snow or ice on the road - slow down.

Winter driving — Before leaving home, clean all snow and ice off your windows, headlights and taillights. Be sure your windshield wipers and defroster are working. No matter how far you are going to drive, never start driving until all snow and ice are removed and windows are clear. Snow and ice has accumulated near your parked car. To pull out, start driving the car out slowly. If your tires start to spin, try clearing a path by driving backwards and for-

Utilities Flight: More than just plumbers

Senior Airman Joshua Hunt, 509th Civil Engineer Squadron, uses a TK-9EE to test a reduced pressure principle device. These units keep contaminated water from entering the more than 330,000 linear feet of clean water lines used by the base.

Airman Niall Campos, and Airman 1st Class Chris Lowe, 509th Civil Engineering Squadron, remove a metal form from a recently poured concrete block around a valve. These valves isolate and shut off water or gas to specific areas around the base.

Senior Airman Joshua Turner, 509th CES, searches for a gas leak with a gas detector called the "sniffer." Every year the 509th CES plumbing shop members check and walk the 172,000 linear feet of natural gas lines throughout the base.

Jerry Alquist, 509th CES, observes a busted water pipe on the monitor while Airman 1st Class Mark Tigbad, 509th CES, controls the descent of the See Snake camera which is used to inspect water lines. The broken pipe restricted water flow and caused drainage problems for at the base car wash.

Senior Airman Pranay Singh, 509th Civil Engineer Squadron Utilities Flight, operates a sewer truck. This truck uses up to 1,500 pounds of water presser to spray water for sewer line cleaning and to remove blockages. Items that typically cause blockages are toilet paper, excessive amounts of food and grease. With the help of the sewer truck, plumbing shop members maintain 270,000 linear feet of waste water lines throughout the base.

509er loading up for success

Public Affairs

Senior Airman Elise Gotschall is a star in the 509th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, said Master Sgt. Gary Bolton, 509th AMXS first sergeant, of the recent below-the-zone recipient.

As a weapons load team foreman in the 393rd Aircraft Maintenance Unit, Airman Gotschall earned BTZ and sewed on senior airman after just two years in the Air Force.

“I was motivated and inspired most by the people in my squadron: supervisors, co-workers and the Airmen who came before me,” Airman Gotschall said.

Master Sgt. Darren McCrory, 509th AMXS, said Airman Gotschall’s determination and hard-working attitude contributed to her earning BTZ.

“She enjoys and goes after challenges with a consistently positive attitude,” he said.

As part of her occupation, Airman Gotschall drives a jammer — a vehicle that loads munitions into the B-2 bomb bay. She said she’s proud to have a job and position allowing her to contribute directly to Whiteman’s overall mission.

“I’m just thankful to be a part of the Air Force and this base,” she said. “I never thought I’d have the chance to do anything like this.”

The 21-year-old Airman followed in the footsteps of her three older siblings — each of whom joined the military — and began her Air Force career shortly after graduating high school. She said she looked forward to new opportunities and a chance to serve her country.

Before enlisting, Airman Gotschall said she never understood the full extent and significance of patriotism and maintaining the attitude of core values daily.

“Since joining the Air Force, I’m exceedingly aware and proud of our core values and the freedoms we often take for granted as a country,” she said.

With plans to go on striving everyday to do the best she can, Airman Gotschall continues to set her goals high, and serve Whiteman and her country with enthusiasm.

“Airman Gotschall is a very positive, upbeat and accomplishing individual,” said her supervisor, Senior Master Sgt. Rodney Shatto, 509th AMXS. “She encourages others and sets an example for her co-workers by exercising leadership in a very professional manner. Airman Gotschall is a prudent individual who always presents herself with impeccable appearance.”

When she’s not working, Airman Gotschall enjoys traveling, bike riding, going for walks, and visiting family and friends in her native Illinois. She also stays busy participating in base and community activities such as highway cleanups and Operation Warm Heart. Airman Gotschall also volunteers for several squadron functions, leads many B-2 tours, and has won various awards within her squadron including Armament Technician of the Year for 2003.

Community support improves quality of life for base family

(Editor's note: Capt. Steve Smart is a member of the 509th Bomb Wing Legal Office. He wanted to publicly thank people for the support he and his family have received from the base community in making Whiteman a better place to live and work.)

Dear Whiteman Family,

We want to take this opportunity to thank several people of Team Whiteman.

Our daughter, Lauren, has cerebral palsy and other serious medical problems requiring her to use a wheelchair and other medical equipment. This equipment is very difficult to move in and out of our base house.

To assist us, Maureen Gunter at the housing office put in a work order with 509th Civil Engineer Squadron to make our home handicap accessible. In a matter of weeks, a CE construction crew (Jim Ivie, Randy Durham, Tech. Sgt. Roy Grella, and Airmen 1st Class Chad Kaloides and Saul Arvizu) designed and built a very nice wheelchair ramp.

The ramp meets all of our functional needs, but these guys went the extra mile to give it the look and feel of a deck rather than a disabled access way.

Throughout the process, the crew was professional, friendly and seemed to take a personal interest in the ramp and Lauren. We really appreciate them.

While we're thanking people, we certainly can't forget Nina Dickey and the staff at the TriCare/TriWest office for assisting us with all the medical bills we receive. Their hard work and dedication allow us to focus on enjoying Lauren rather than worrying about financial obligations. We'd also like to thank Maj. (Dr.) JoAnn Couch, Tiffany Weaver and the 509th Medical Group staff, because they truly take care of us.

Thanks all!

Sincerely,
Capt. Steve, Randi and Lauren Smart

CS swings past MUNS in championship game

By Master Sgt. Jeff Folsom
72nd Test and Evaluation Squadron

The base championship for the 2004 Intramural Golf season was decided when the 509th Communications Squadron beat the 509th Munitions Squadron team Tuesday.

These teams met during the playoffs and went to sudden death before CS came out on top. After MUNS breezed through the losers bracket, they again faced the undefeated CS team. In the double elimination round, MUNS won first match; however, a second match proved CS victorious with a 7-5 win.

Johnny Benson, 509th CS first sergeant, congratulated the MUNS team on an outstanding match. "I was impressed by their ability to make some great shots when it counted," he said.

The early part of the season was hampered by weather with weekly downpours and thunderstorms creating a challenging schedule.

Phil Denham, manager and resident pro at the Royal Oaks Golf Course, expressed his appreciation to all of the teams for their support and determination in seeing the league through to the finish.
